(Table showing the performance of Egyptian sovereign sukuk on 19/06/2026)

Egypt's international sovereign sukuk prices continued to rise during the week ended (19/06/2026), as shown in the table above, supported by a combination of domestic and external factors that strengthened investor confidence in the Egyptian economy and in U.S. dollar-denominated sovereign debt instruments. On the domestic front, the notable appreciation of the Egyptian pound against the U.S. dollar supported the performance of the sukuk. The exchange rate declined to EGP 49.86 per U.S. dollar on Wednesday, (17/06/2026)[3], marking the dollar's lowest level since March 2026. This development enhanced investor confidence in the stability of Egypt's economic conditions, particularly amid continued improvements in external sector indicators and the economy's growing ability to attract foreign capital inflows.

On the external front, emerging markets benefited from improved investor sentiment following the easing of geopolitical tensions in the Middle East and the announcement of a ceasefire agreement between the United States and Iran. This development helped alleviate concerns over potential disruptions to global energy markets and international trade, while increasing investor appetite for sovereign debt instruments issued by emerging-market economies.
