(Table showing the performance of Egyptian sovereign sukuk on 10/07/2026)

The Egyptian international sovereign sukuk exhibited mixed performance during the trading week ended in (10/07/2026), amid global market anticipation of the implications of the release of the Federal Reserve's latest Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting minutes[3], while investors continued to assess both global and domestic economic developments. On the external front, the minutes of the FOMC meeting, released on(08/07/2026), revealed continued divergence among Federal Reserve policymakers regarding the appropriate path for monetary policy. The majority of participants emphasized that future interest rate decisions would remain data-dependent, particularly with respect to inflation and labor market developments. The minutes also highlighted persistent concerns over inflationary pressures, reinforcing expectations that interest rates could remain at their current elevated levels for an extended period or, if warranted by economic conditions, be tightened further. Meanwhile, the Egyptian international sovereign sukuk maturing in October 2032 recorded a slight decline in the first trading session following the release of the FOMC minutes, with its price easing from $104.61 on (08/07/2026), to $104.54 on (09/07/2026). However, it subsequently recovered, rising to $104.71 by the end of the week. This suggests that the impact of the FOMC minutes was temporary, while sustained investor appetite for Egypt's longer-dated sovereign issuances continued to provide support.
